"To my dick",

This has been a great year. Maybe the Mets, Rangers, Phils, and Knicks can have as good a year. You will have to come back on Alumni day in the Spring and see who is playing shortstop. "Big E" himself. Someday when I'm playing shortstop for Baltimore you will have to come on down and say "It's to me" Take care of your and keep it clean. Good Luck at N.Y.U.

"Big E"

Hi Dick,
I hope you have a great time at these games and I wish I could be there too.
Bob Patterson

MY DICK,
SOME DAY I KNOW YOU WILL BE PLAYING with The RANGERS OR THE PHILLIES OR AGAINST ARNOLD PALMER. When you Come back NEXT YEAR ON ALUMNI DAY I'll hit a Couple of home Runs For you. TED the Hunt

Dear Dick,
Remembering the good times we had together on the bench, between my pitching and Bob's coaching their sure was a lot to be desired. With the gloves you have you can go pretty far maybe even to the mets.
Keep punchin'

Dick,
I've enjoyed having
you and "B is E" on the hall with me this year. It's been great working you up at 8:00 A.M.
and all the other great times.

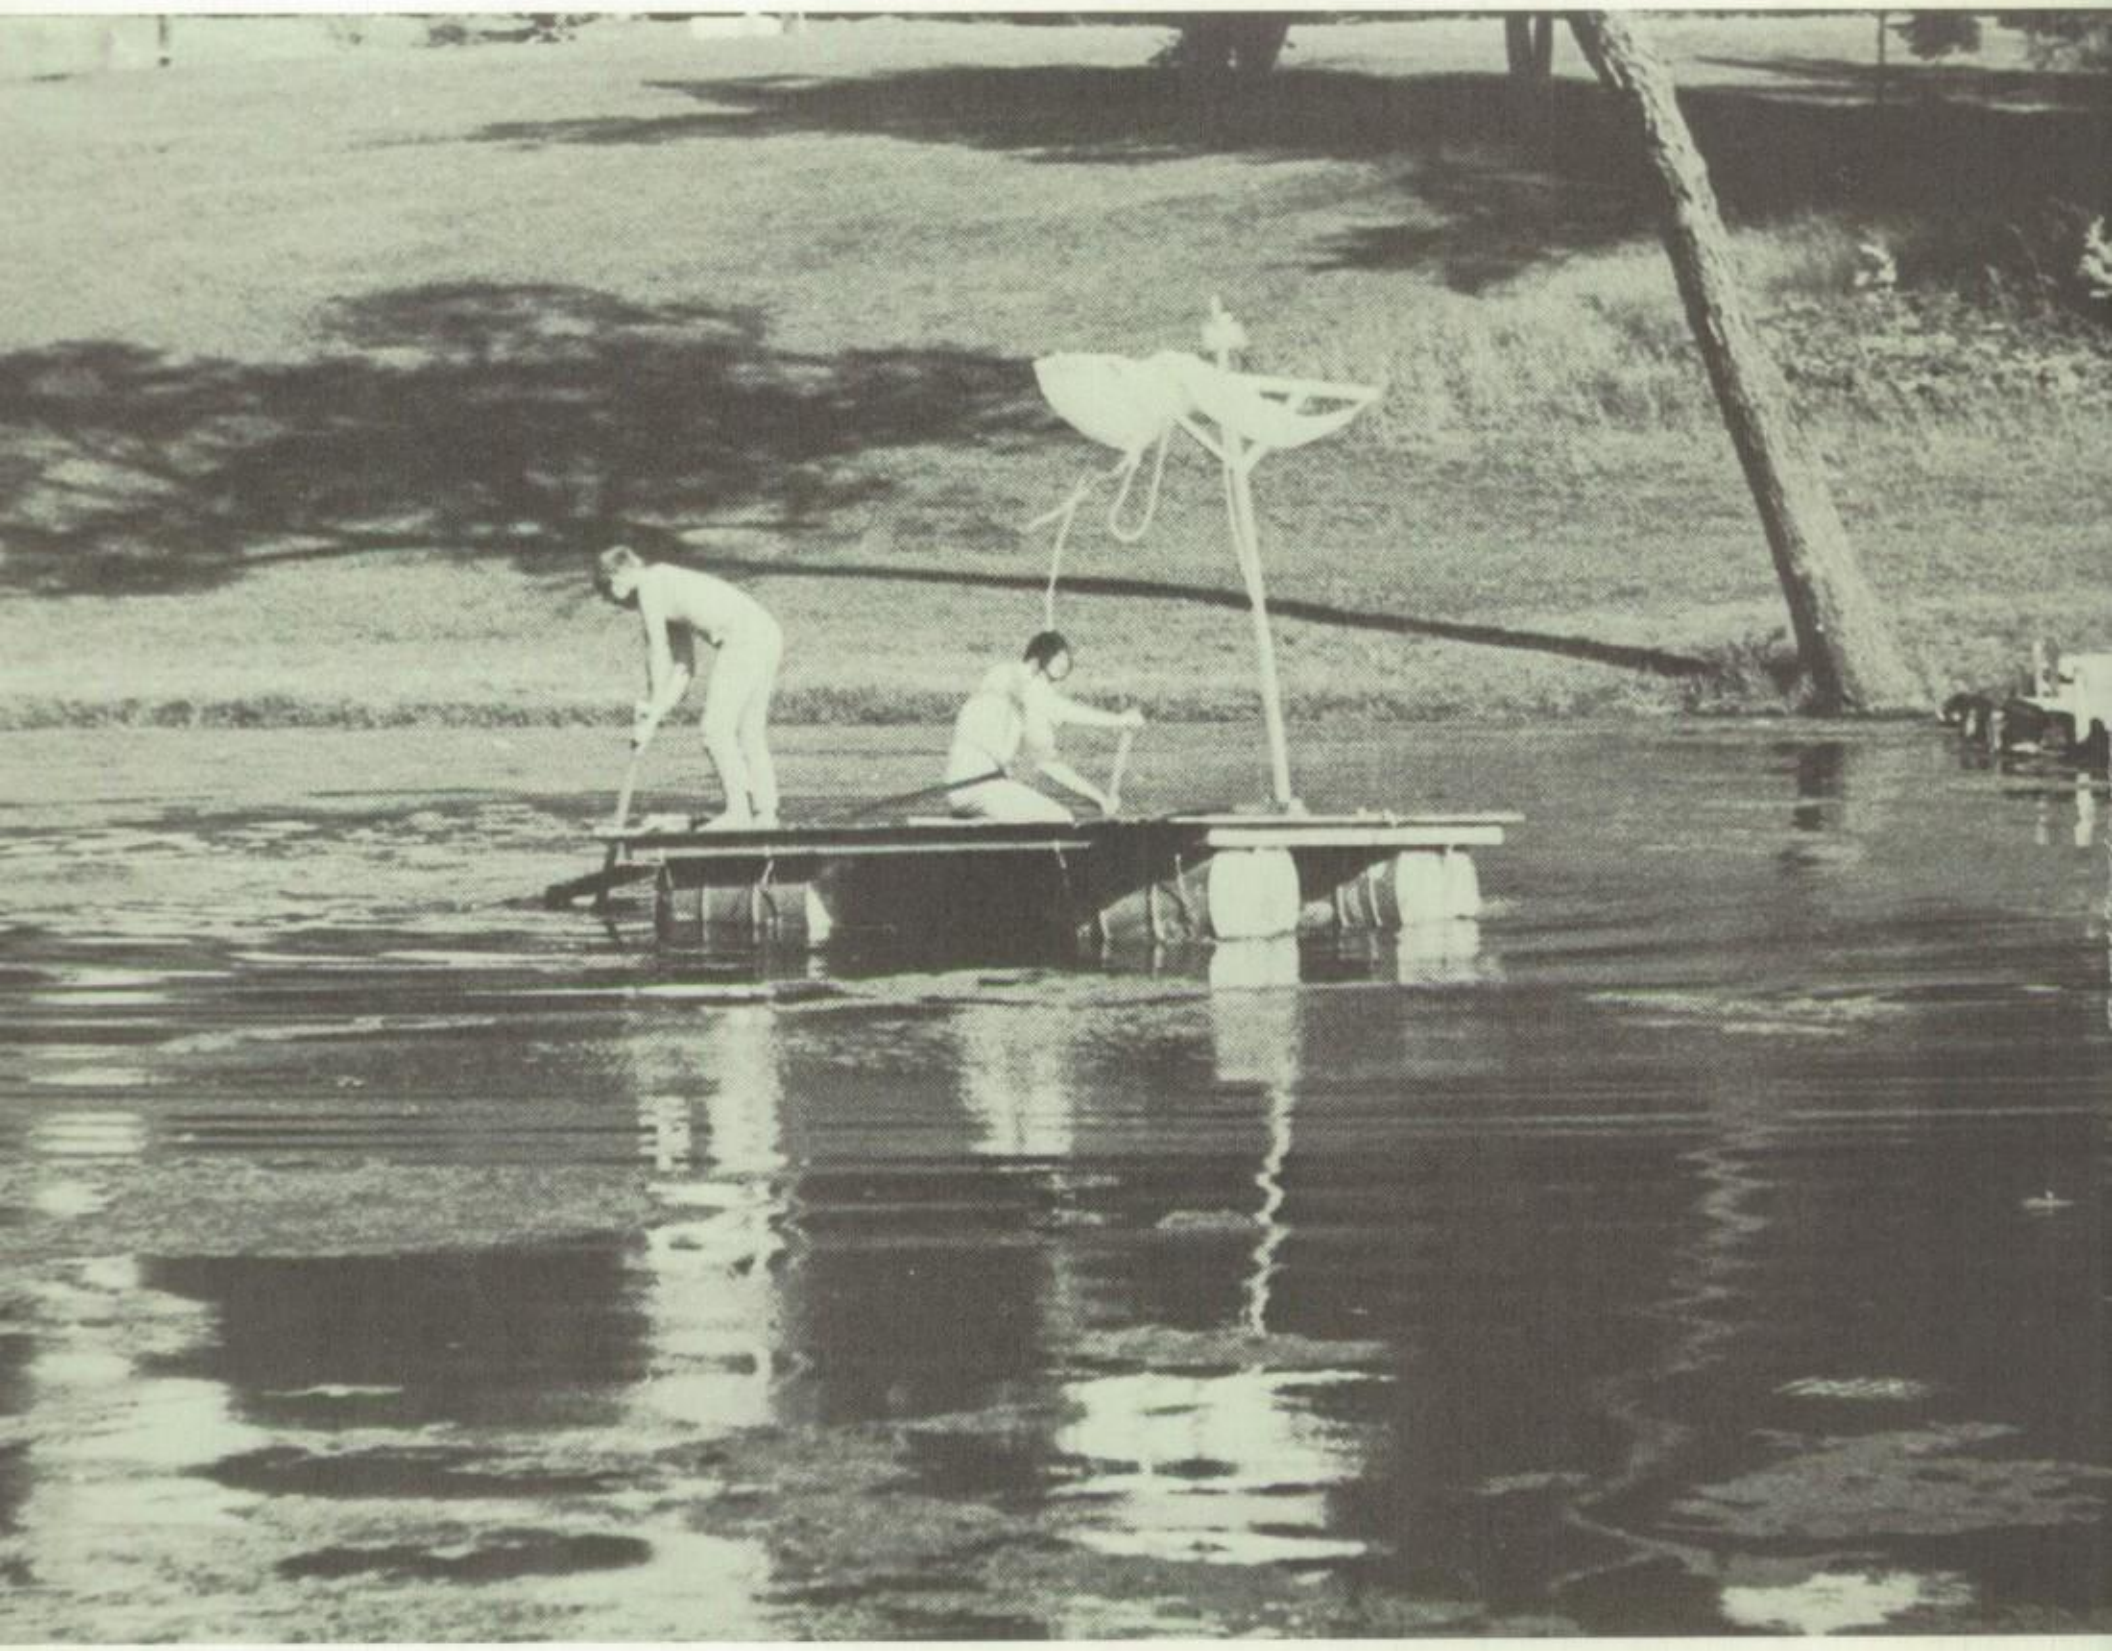
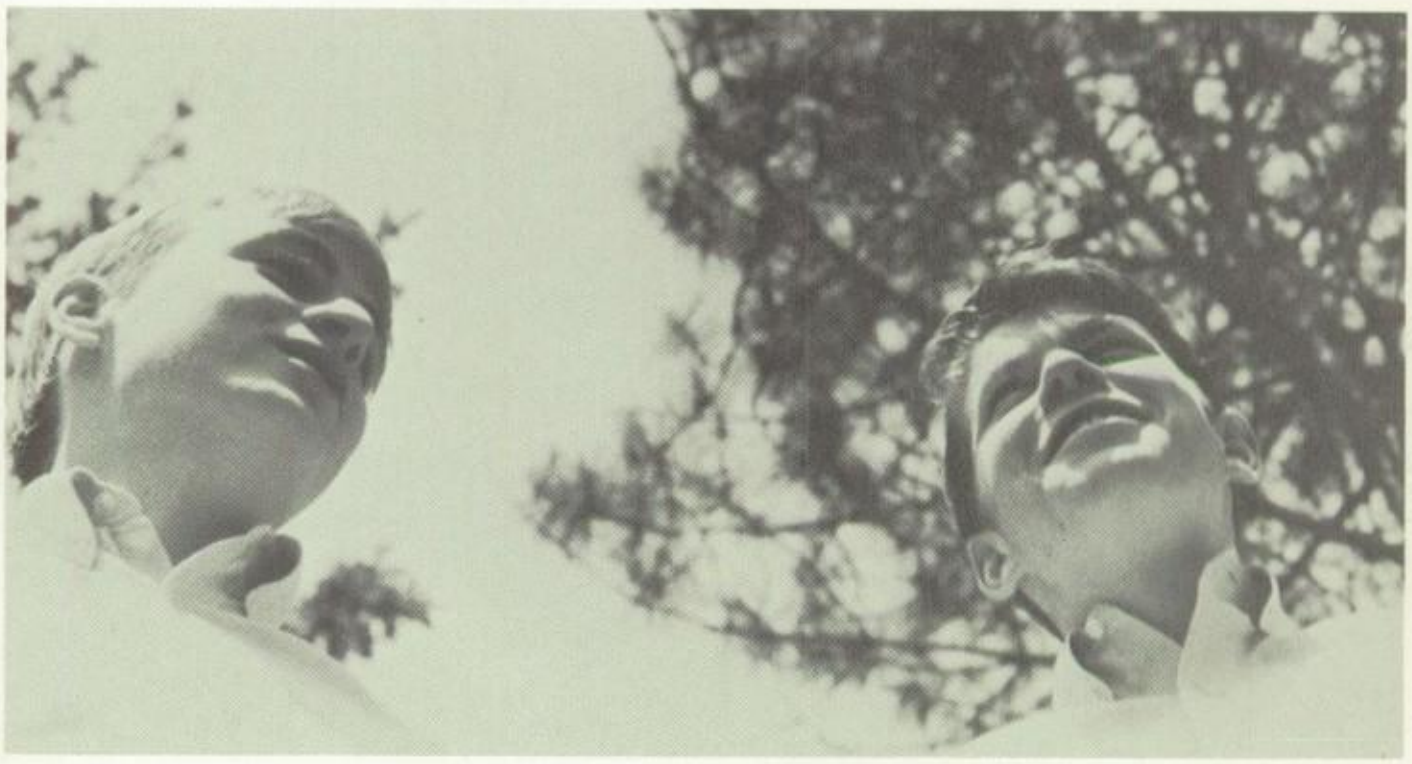
May 60





The glare of newly polished floors. Empty beds against yellow walls; a scratched dresser and desk for each bed. You snap on the cold overhead light.

Back from summer you immediately recognize the smell of the dining room: breakfast buns, extra butter, evasive jello. You rush upstairs after dinner. That paper counts; these marks count. This year I'm really going to work. You spend until 9:00 talking about that new girl. And you have to go visit your old room to see who is disgracing your memories of it.

The same records are played over and over at the dances and the same forms loom in the corners. You check your mailbox again—a yellow envelope. They say it hurts them more than you. You meet someone who has been there all along. The snow melts early and the green haze asserts itself more firmly.

A new student asks you if you are a sophomore and you laugh. You have an idea; someone listens. You have power. Name; address; what well-known person do you most admire? Everything is blocked from your mind except naked black type and white spaces. You know you will miss the scalding showers, stale donuts, and guitars in the firetowers.

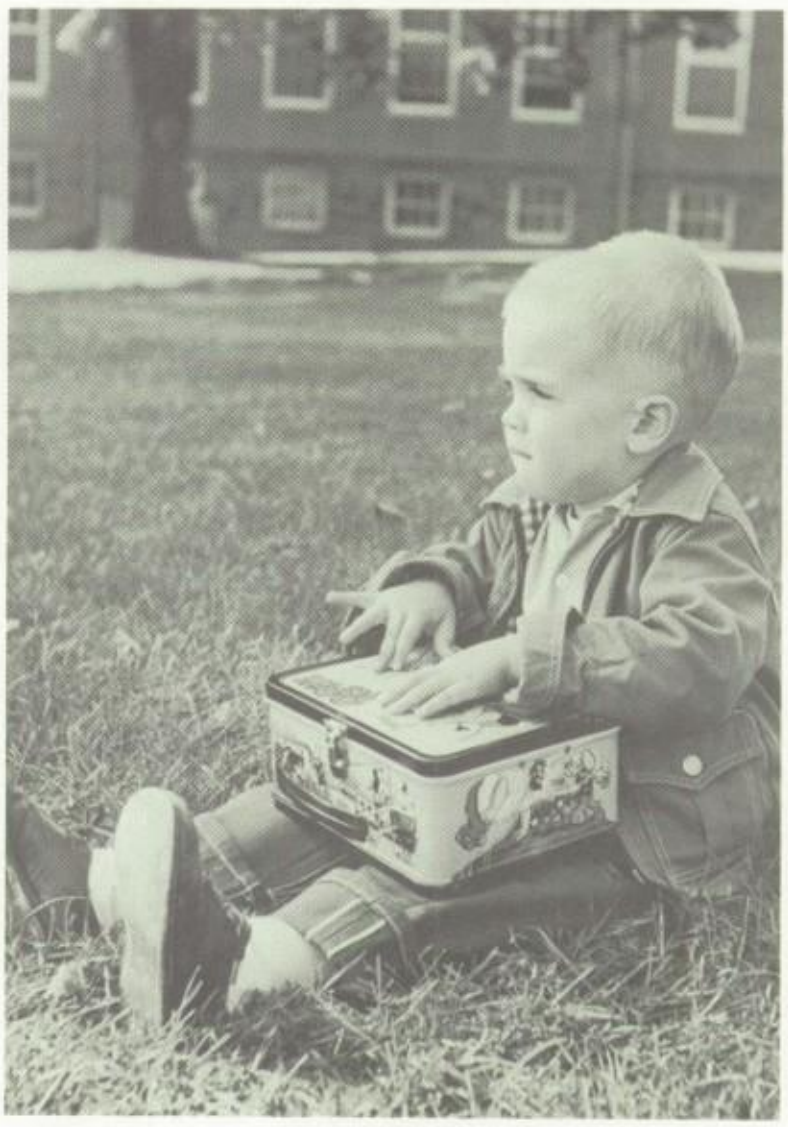
ONE WAY



Doesn't he ever bring Kleenex to class? . . . It's impossible to keep a secret around here . . . You put me in a very difficult position when you say things like that . . . What do you suppose he's grinning about this time? . . . I'm not really looking at you, I'm thinking. I'm not looking at you either . . . I wonder why she always leaves when I arrive . . . I know the answers but his questions really mess me up . . . Why is a grey day so depressing? . . . Did I really say that? . . . I hate feeling restless.

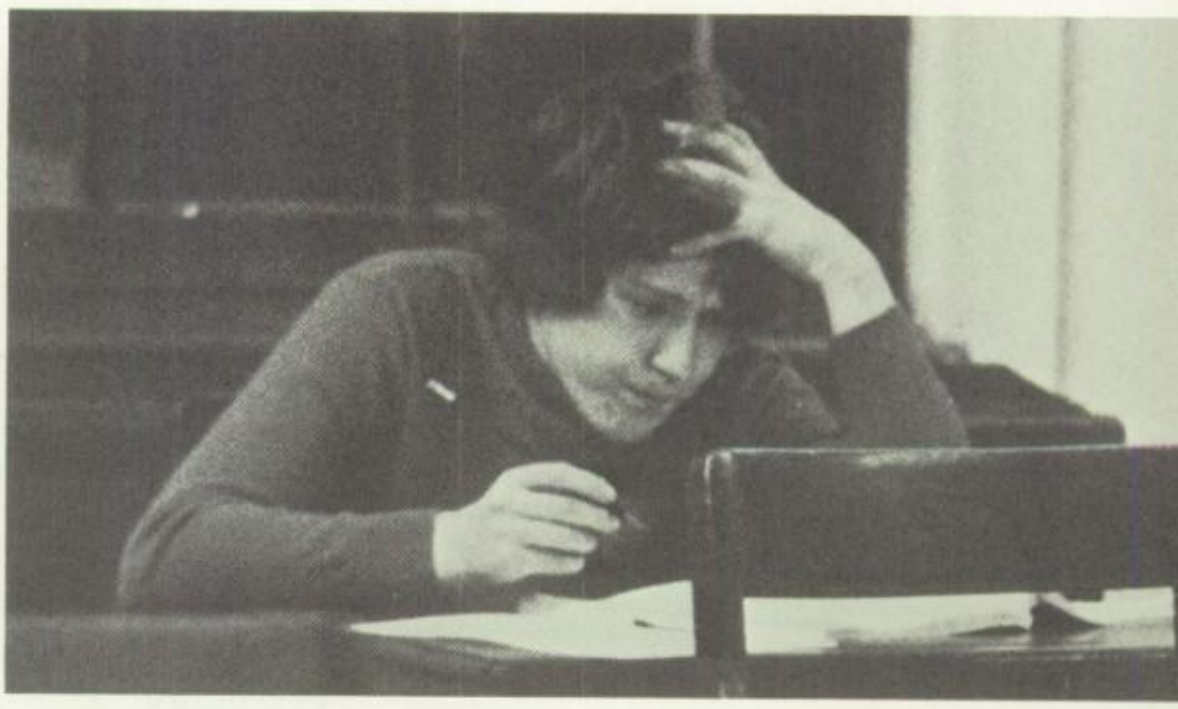
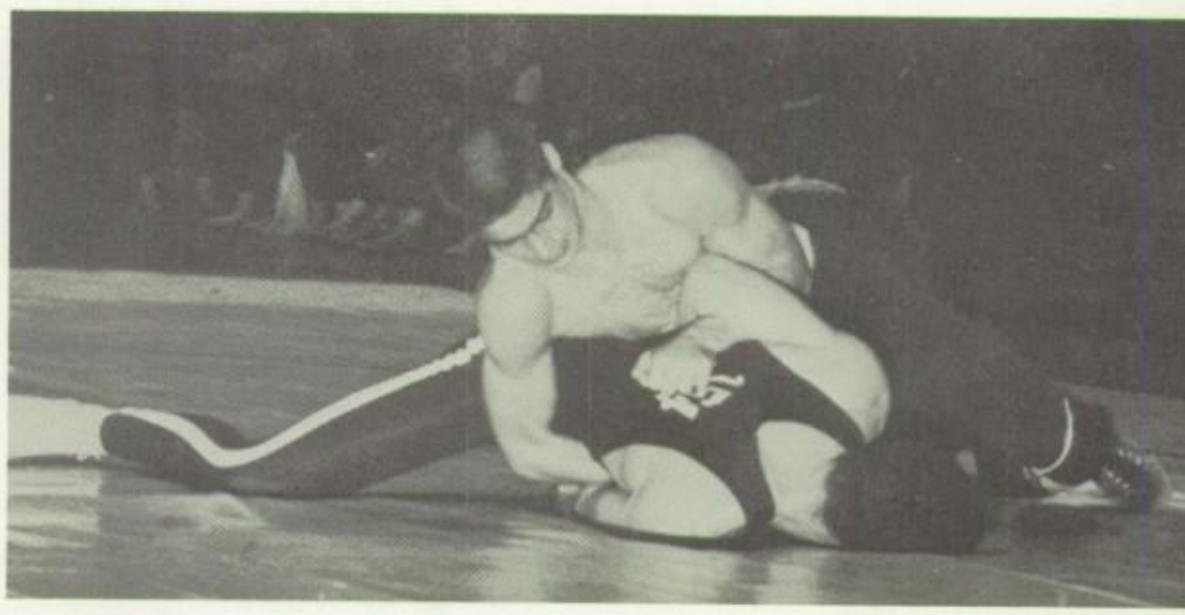
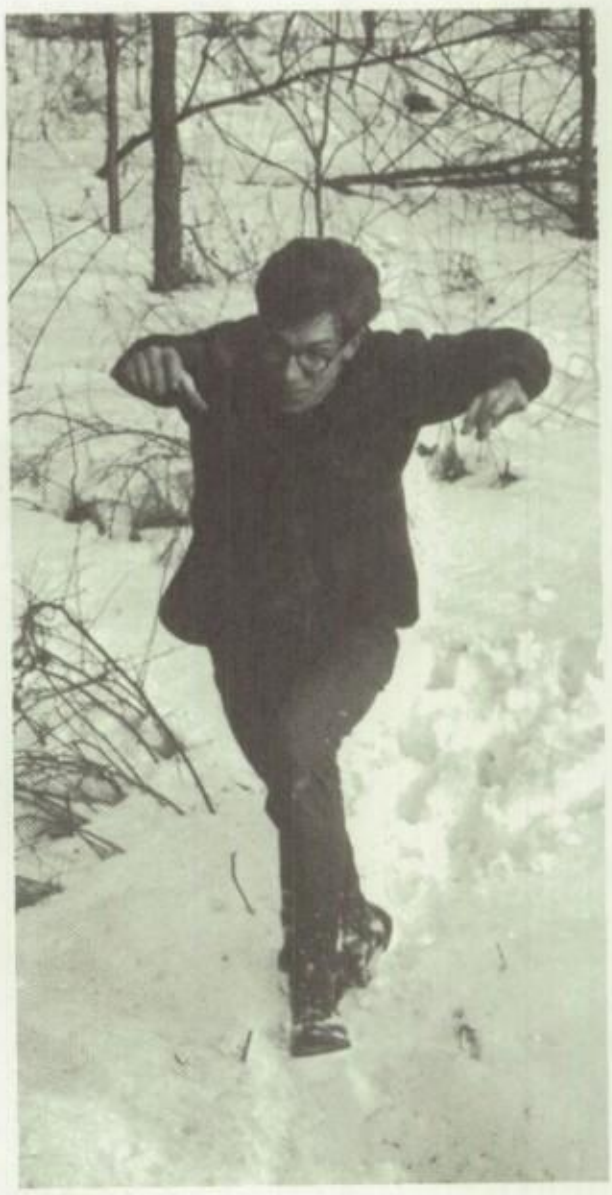
Her tongue pushed over to the corner of her mouth as she bent down to grab at her sagging sock. She wiped her chapped hand across her forehead and clenched the butt of the crosse. The whistle blew. A ripple passed over the far side of the field and the ball arched to meet her outstretched stick. Her body twisted with her swinging arms, the ball in the net rolling in rhythm as she spurted forward, her eyes intent on the far corner of the goal, her breath suspended in the final snap of her wrists and the whip of the shot.

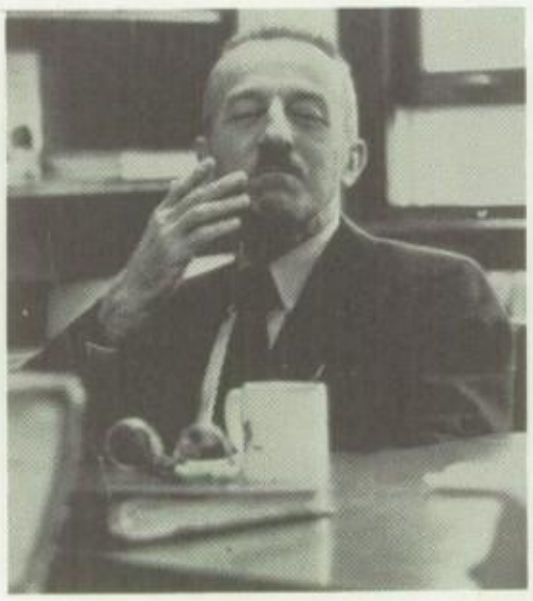
CROSS CO

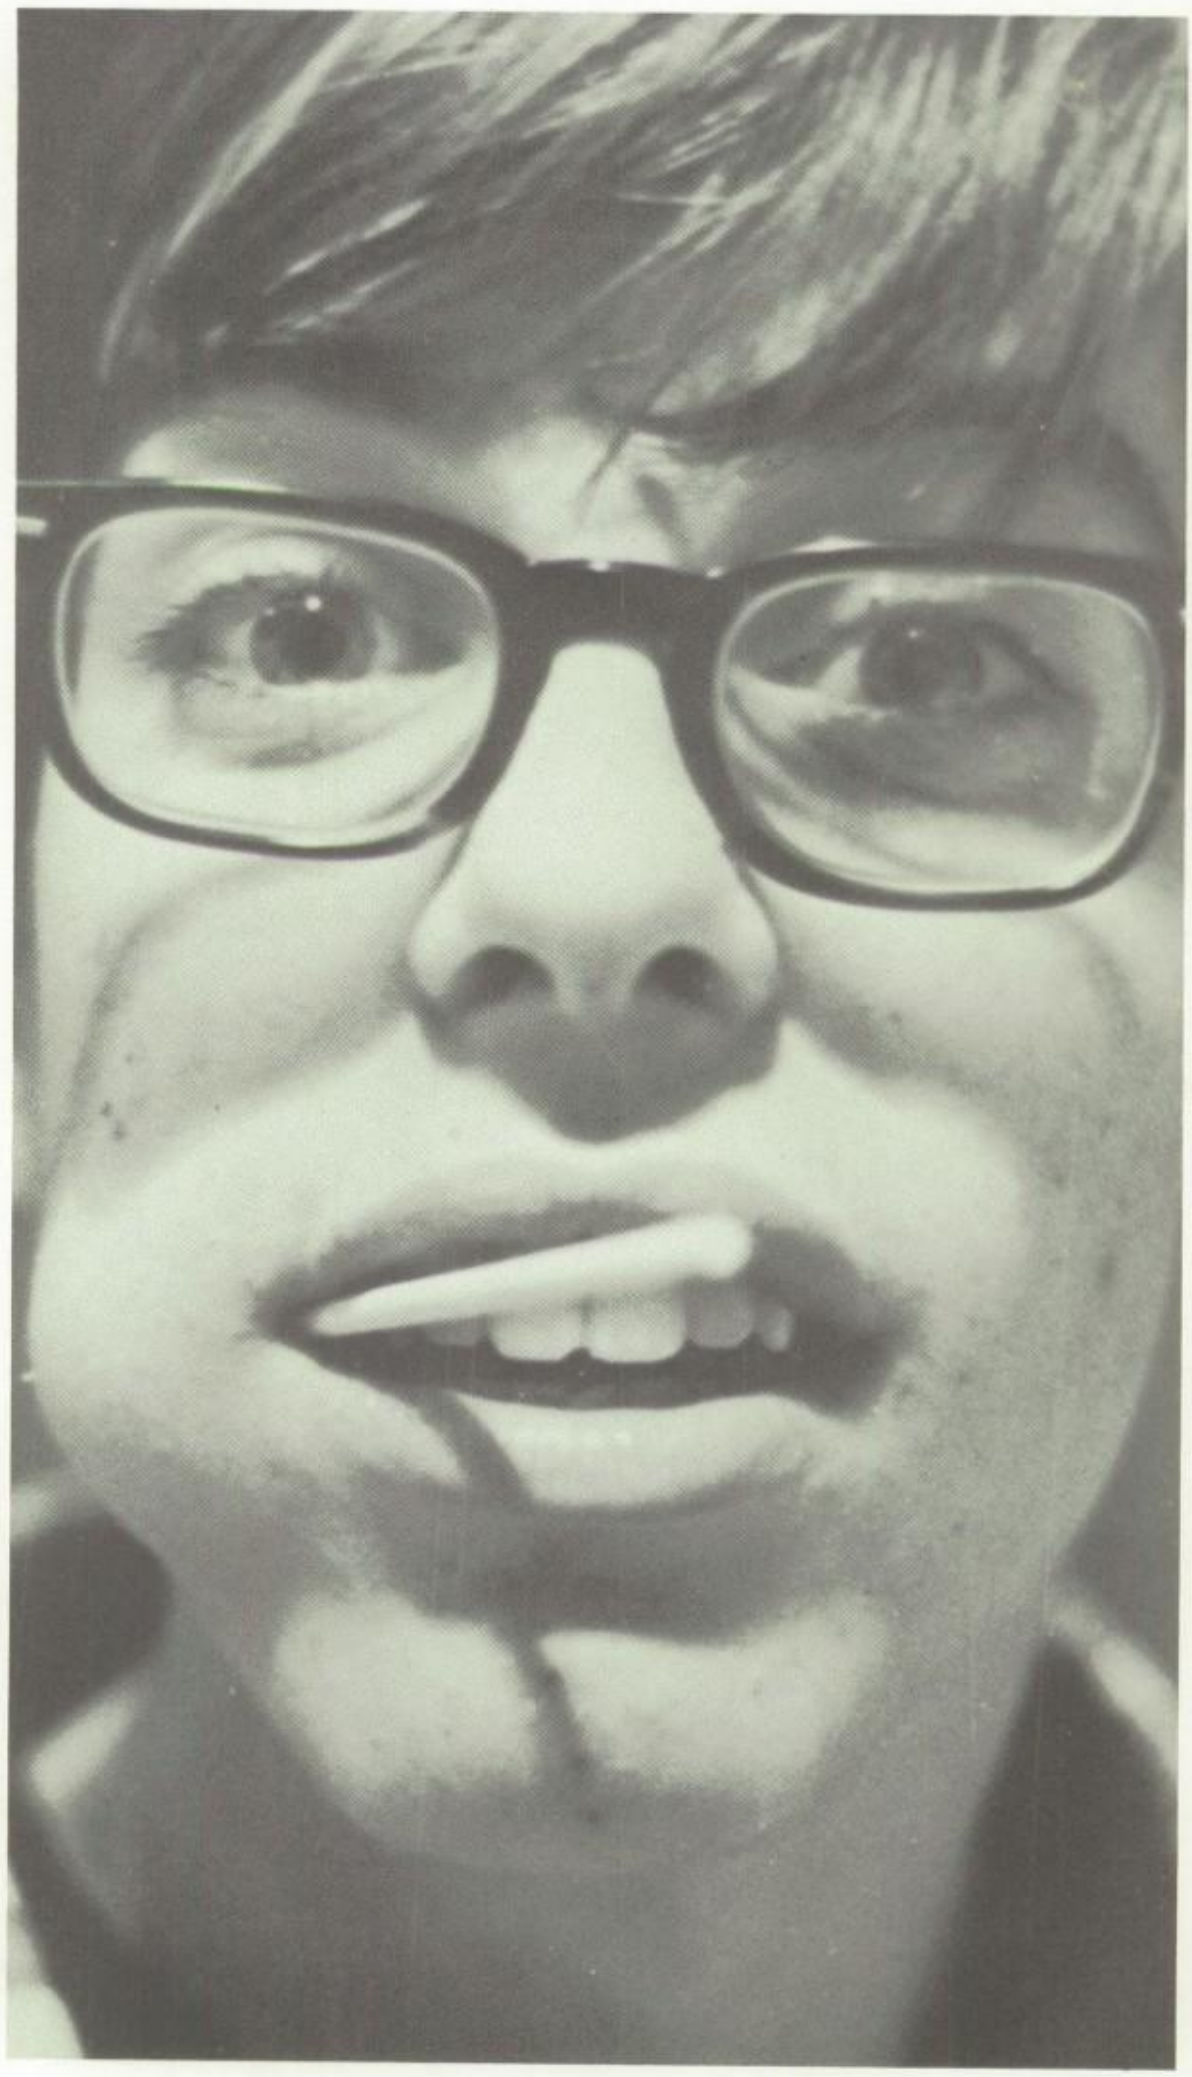


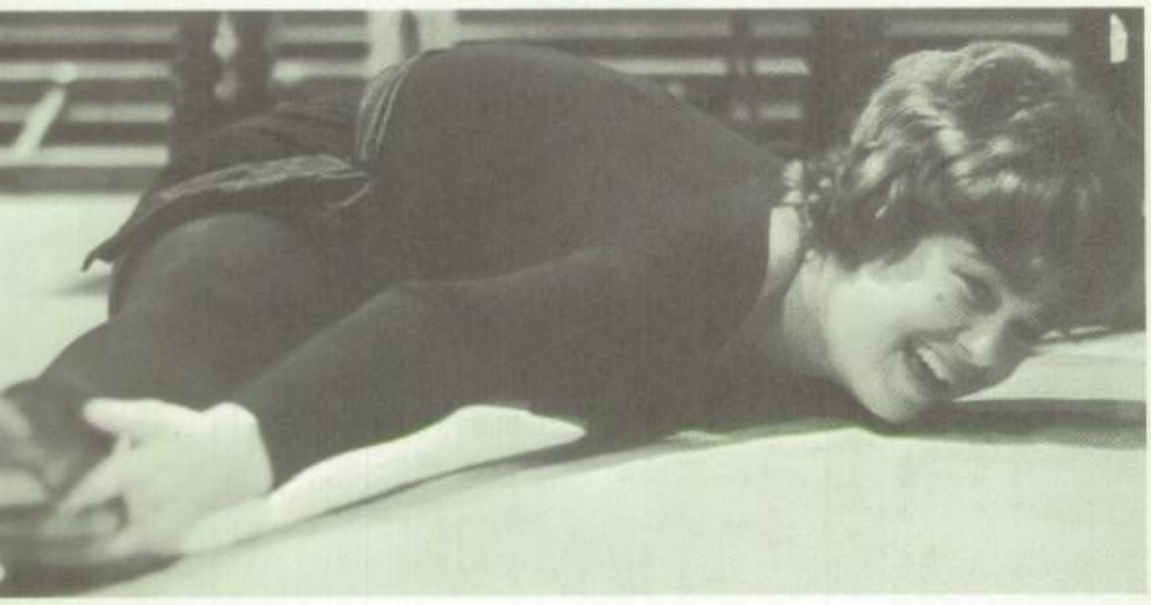


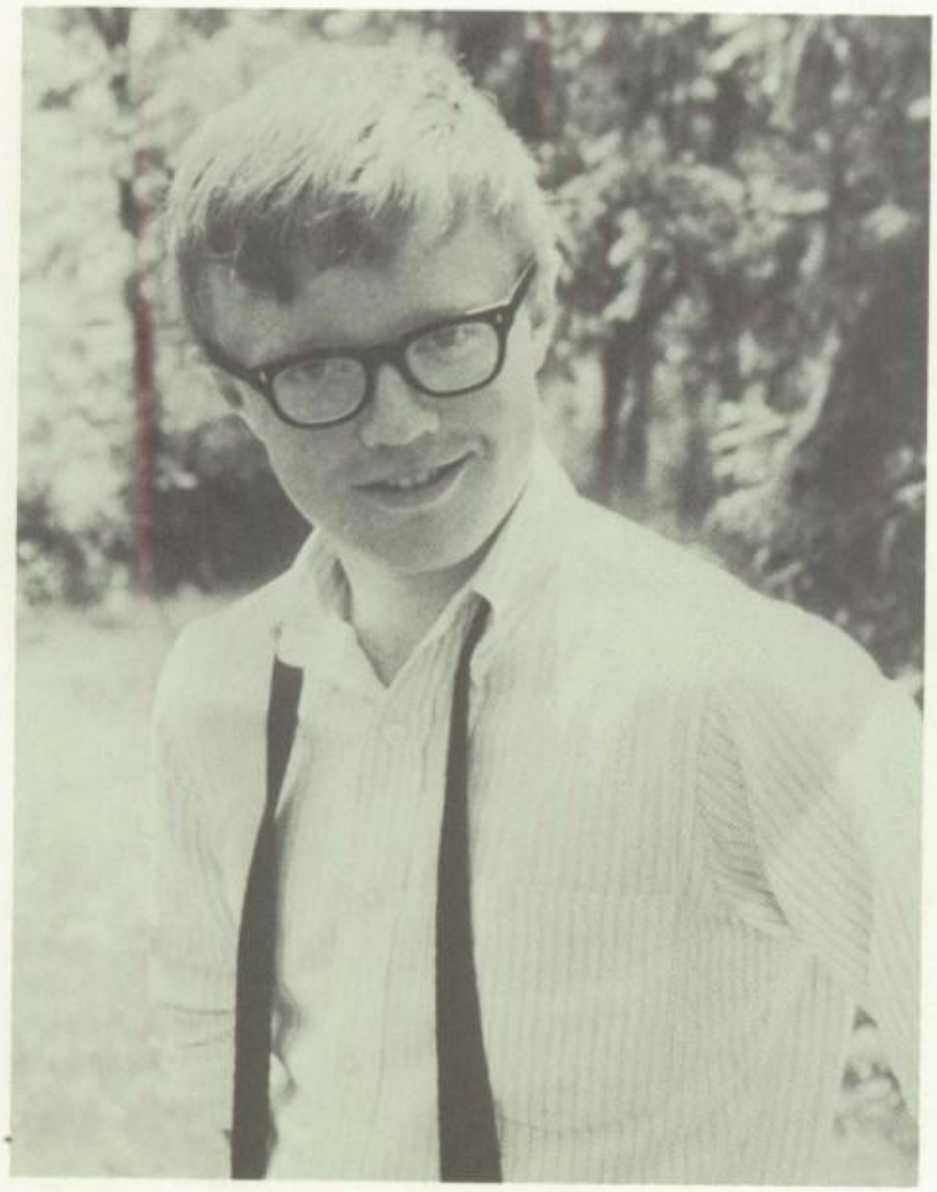
A Red shot. The ball twirled around the rim and rolled off the edge of the basket. Twenty arms grabbed up at the air but he got there and tucked the ball in to himself and then up and around out of the reach of the single Red who was still keeping up with him. All the others had gotten down court ready to try another "72". He worked the ball down smoothly, avoiding the waving fingers, and began driving in past one, two Reds; faked and ducked in for a lay-up. The ball twirled around the rim and rolled off the edge.











Rich,
Its been a good year beating you in hockey. Next year you had better work more, (NO more games) & will still be holding the fort down at camp Gorge. Have a good Summer

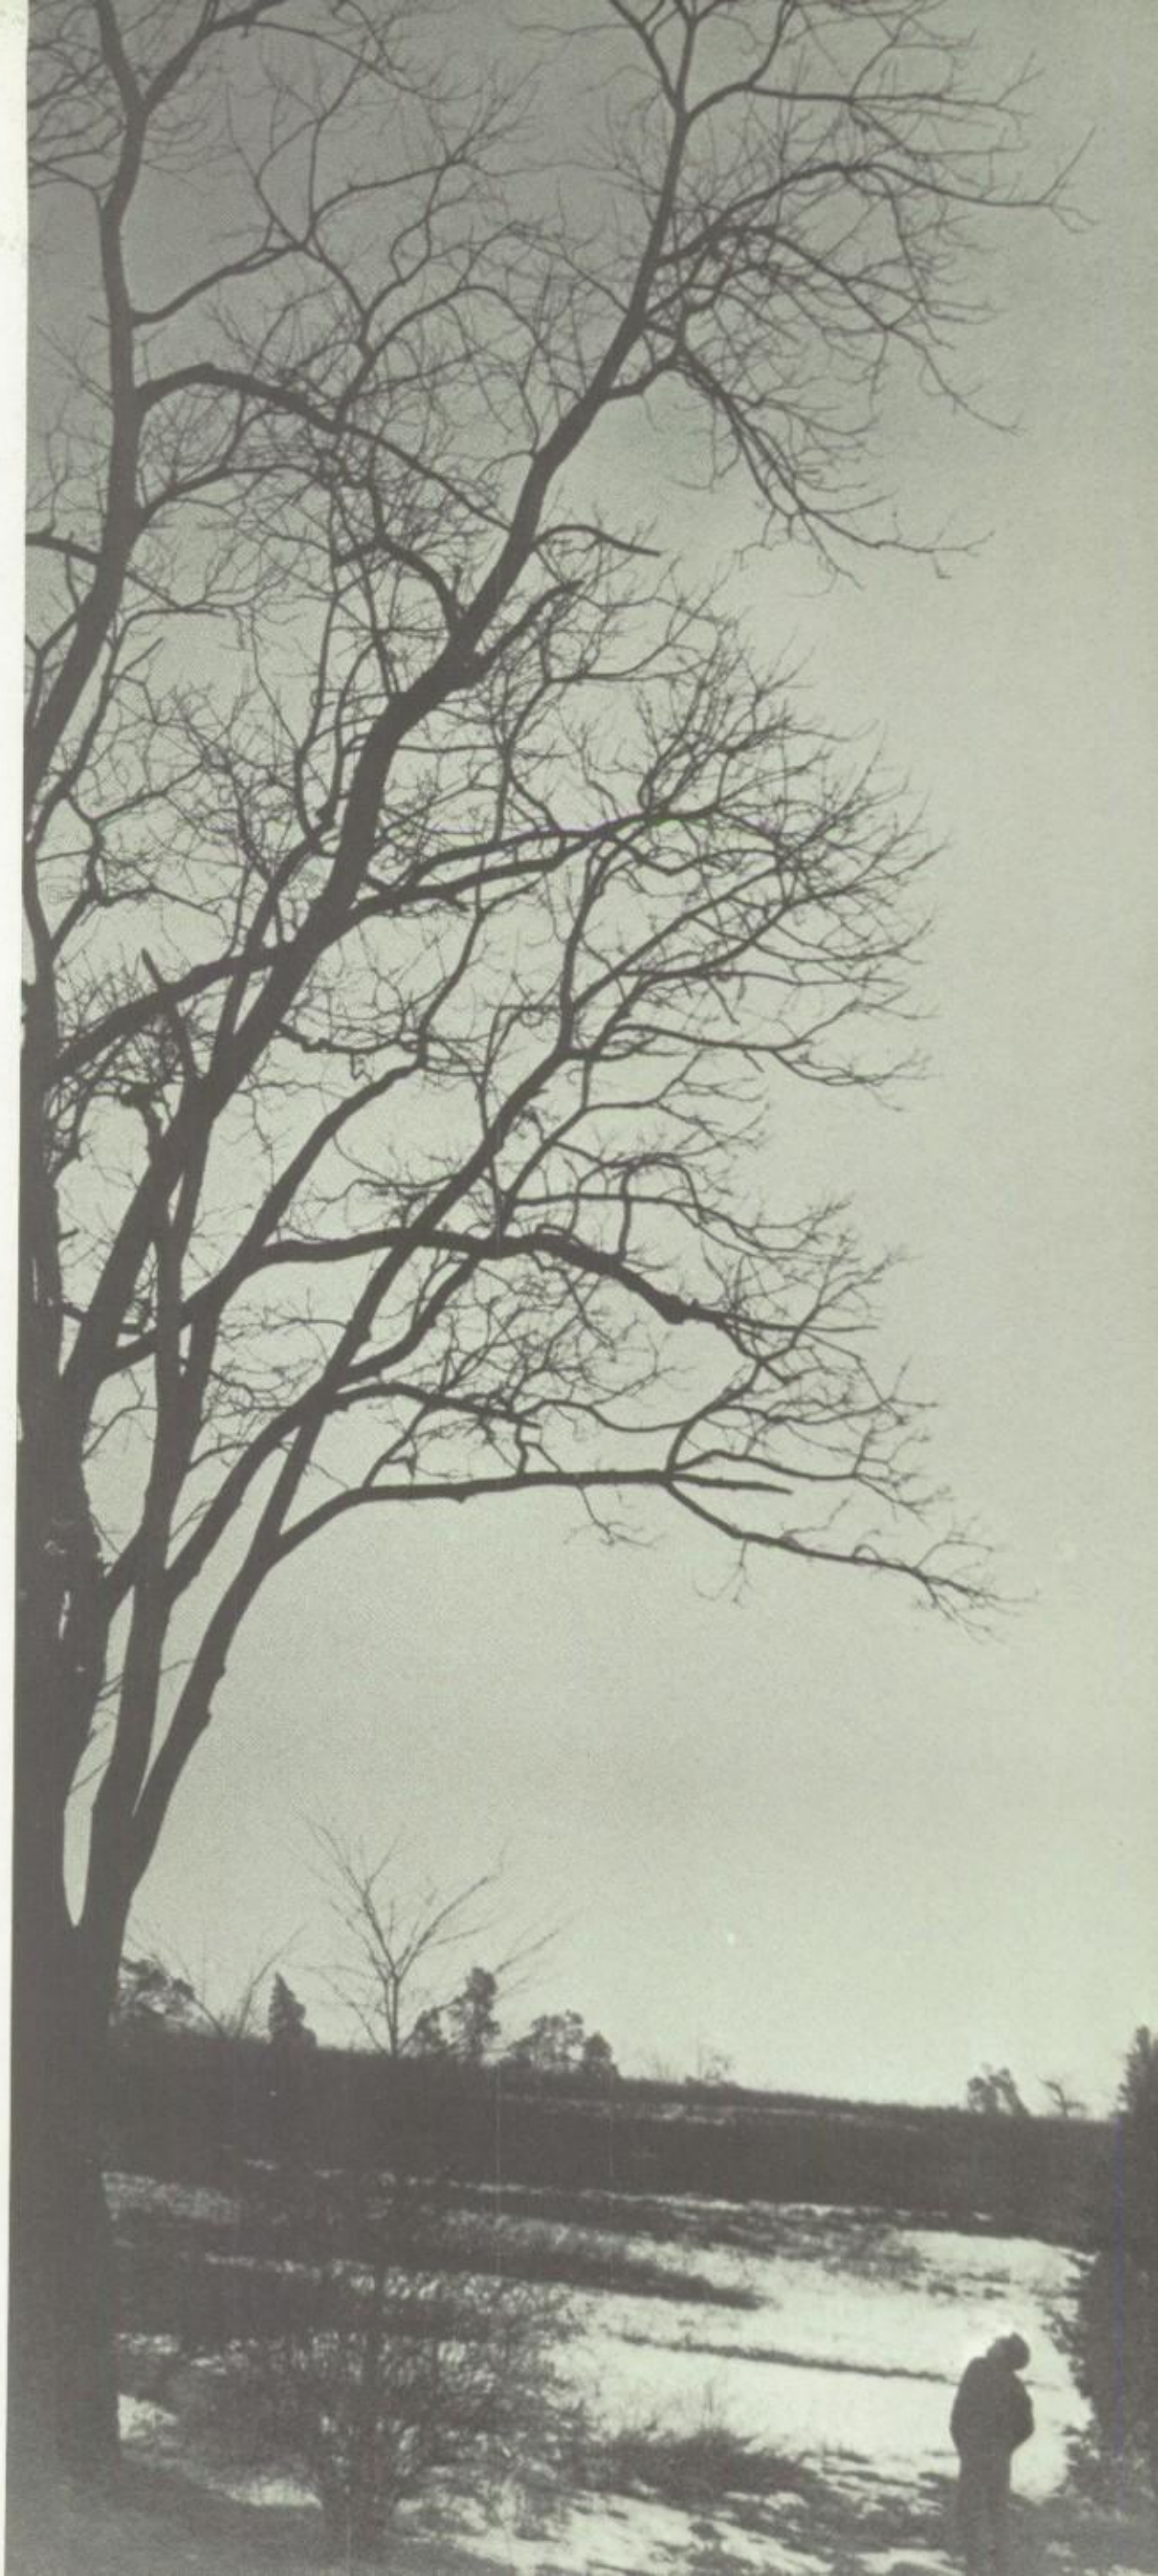
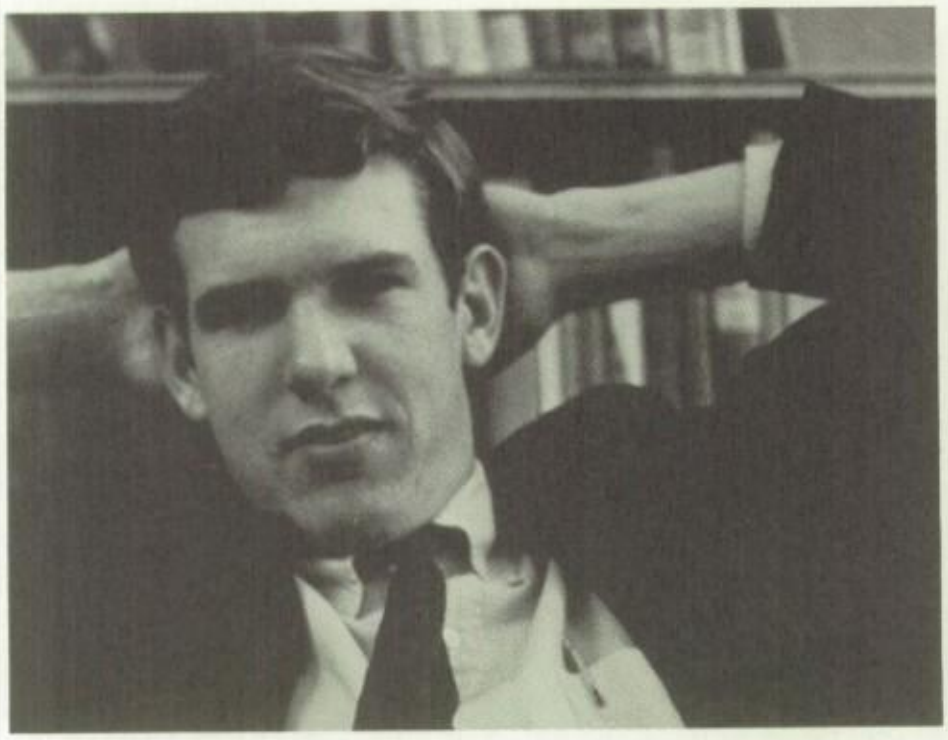
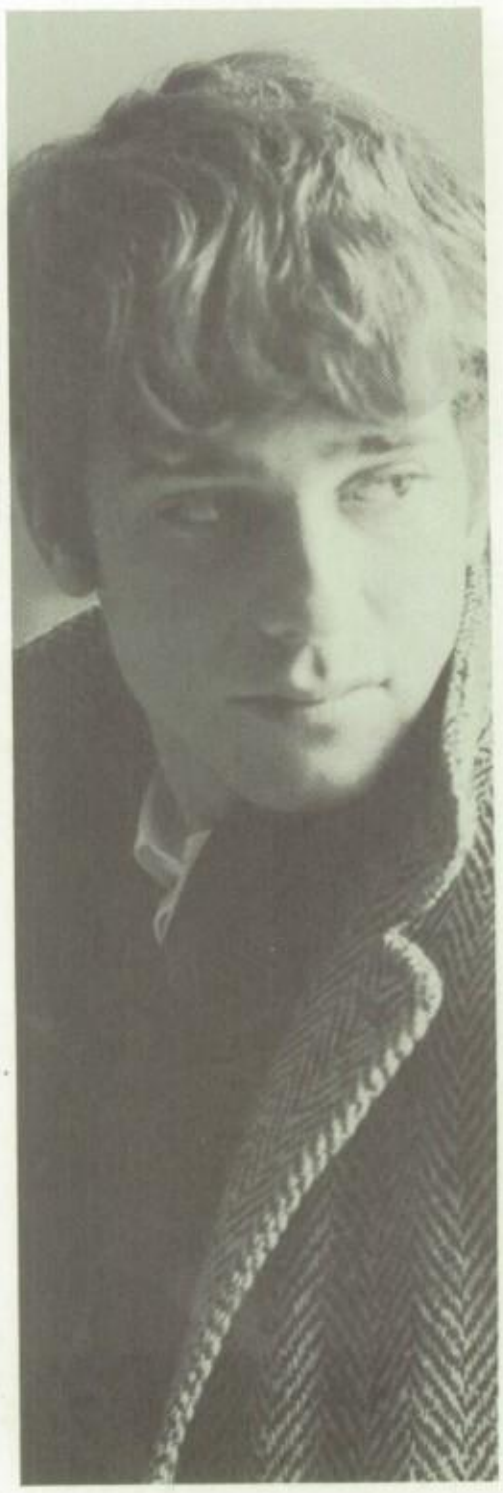
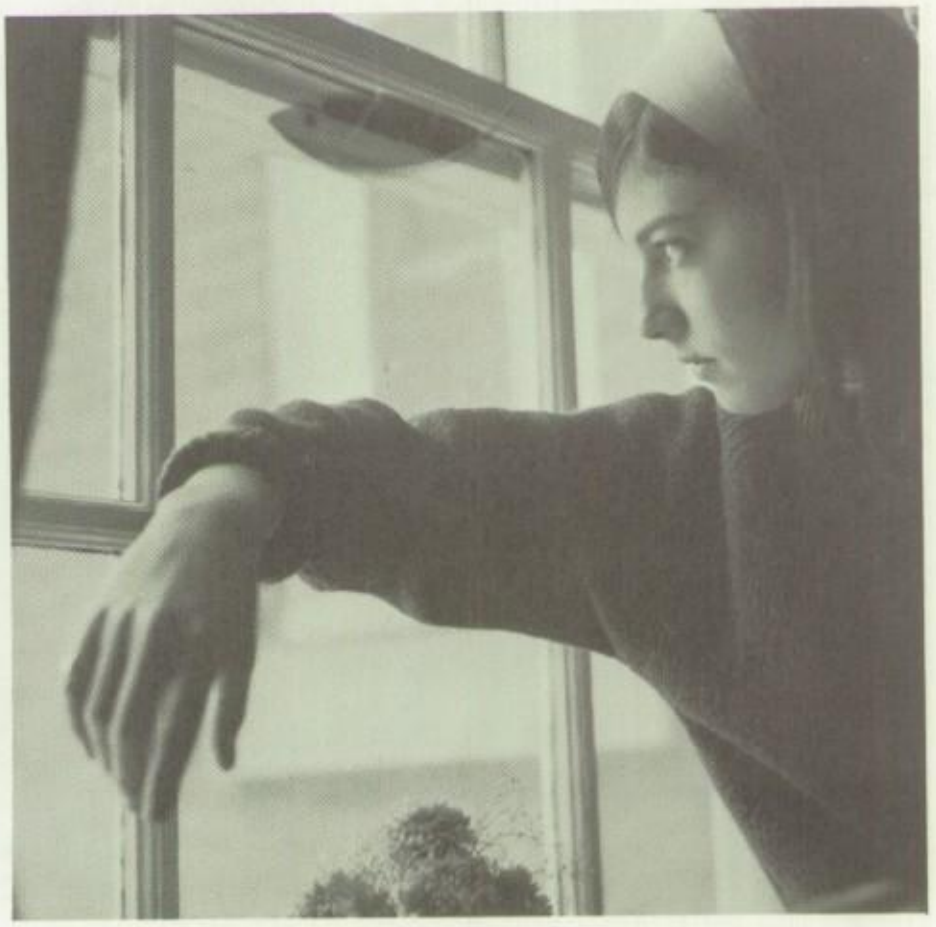
I saw him first at a distance and mistook him for a friend. He returned my 'hi' with a hesitant wave. There was an embarrassed moment when we met and I stood there mumbling my regret at the mistake, then we parted. He's become quite popular since he arrived. I nod to him as we pass in the halls.

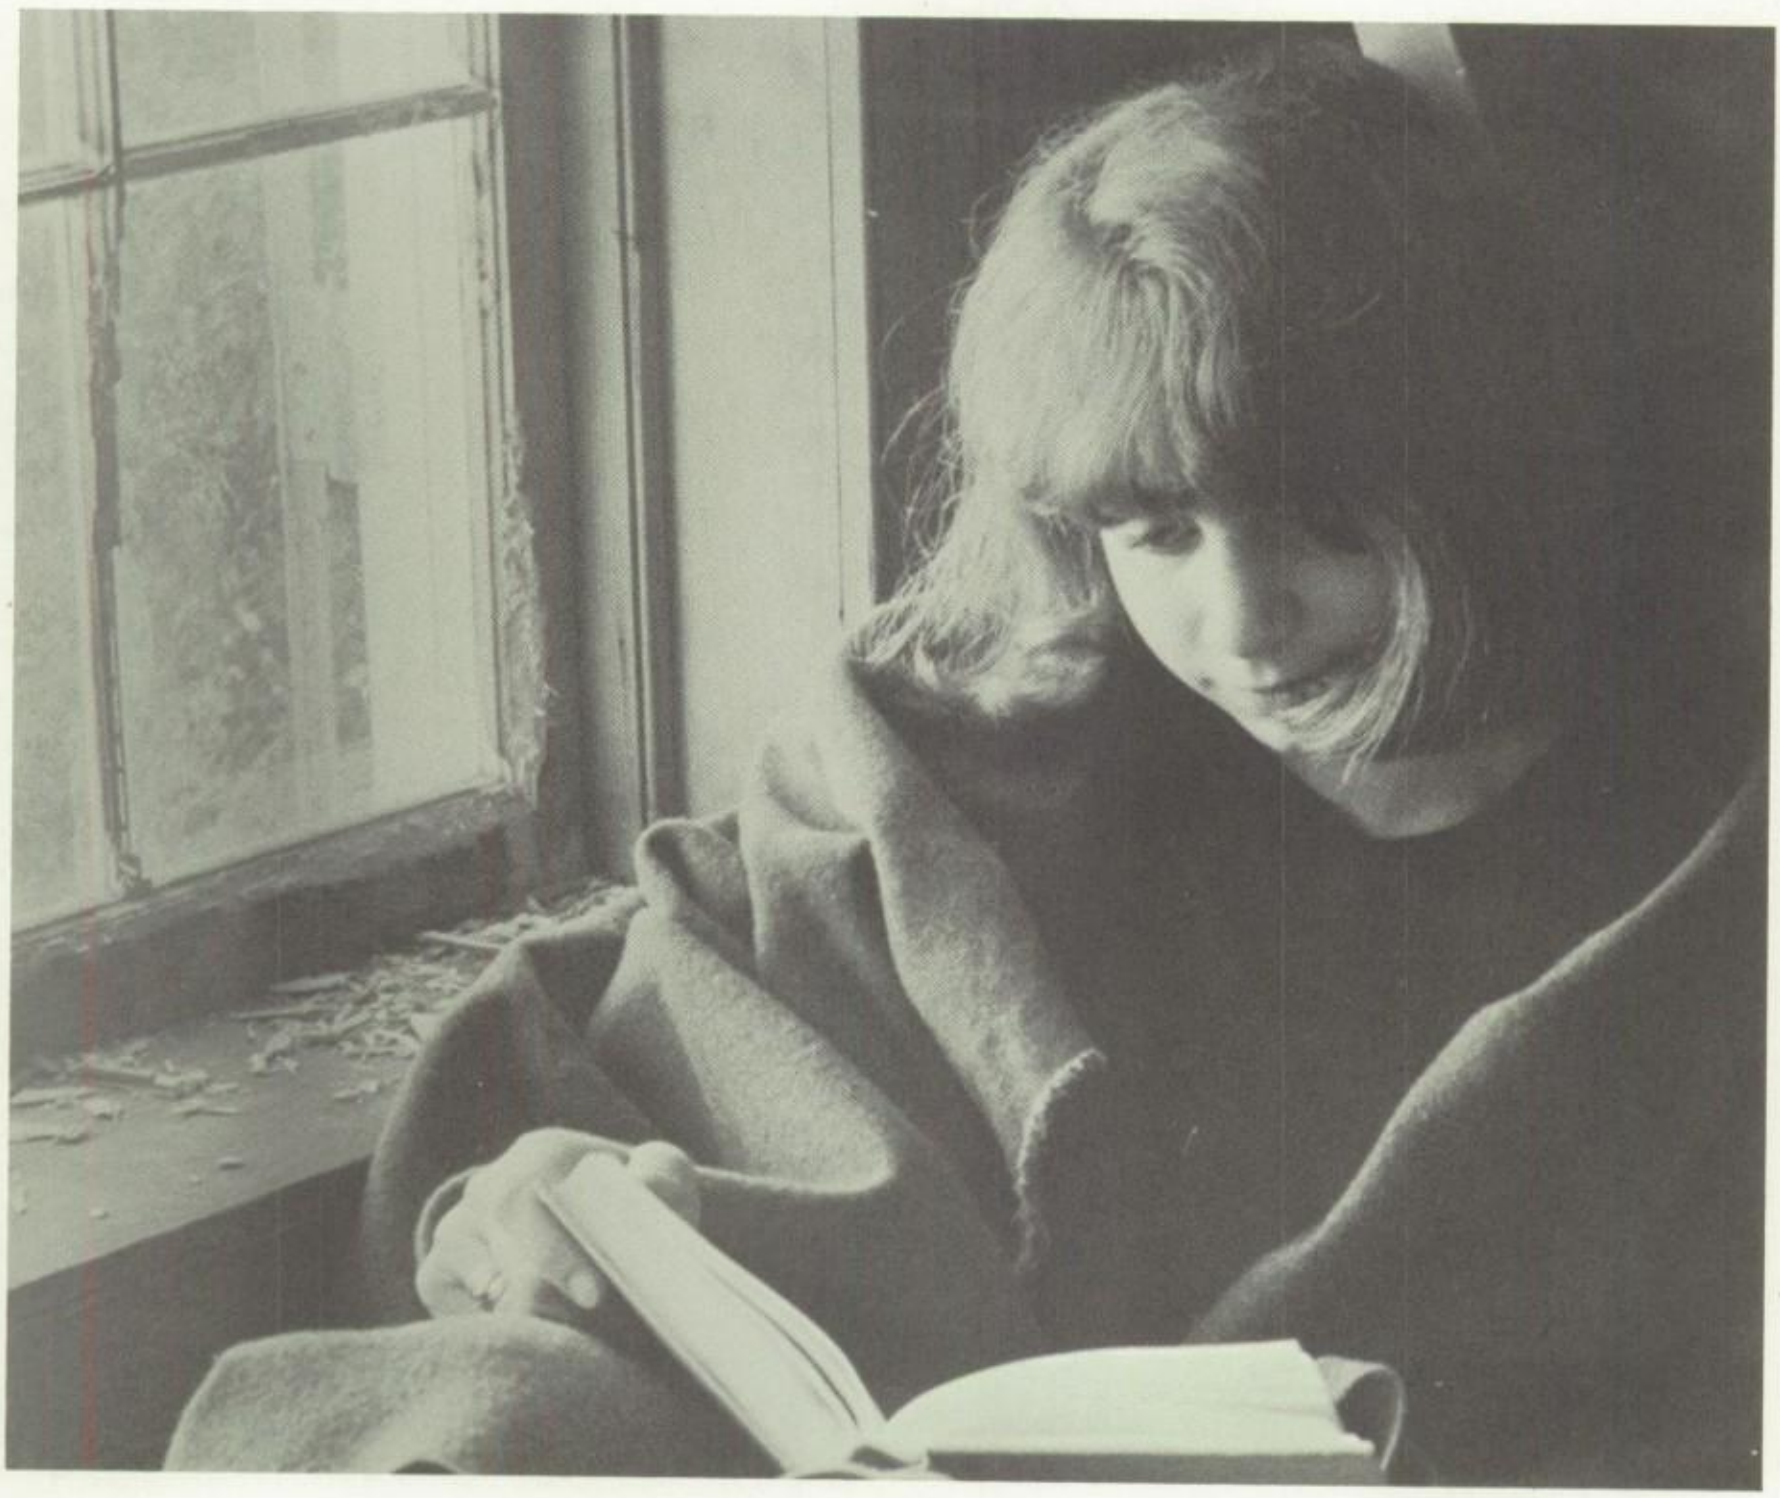
Ugly—that's what we used to call him. Of course, it was just affectionate jesting; he wasn't really ugly, just plain. I remember how he used to react to the name. When he came into a class or a room we'd say "hi, ugly"; he'd just smile in return. I don't expect he liked it too much, but he didn't raise any fuss, which is good. He had a disconcerting habit of going off into his own world without any regard for convenience or timing. You'd be talking along and look over to see if he was following, and he'd have just drifted off to God knows where. Some people really got ticked off over this. Didn't seem to affect him, though. He just did it again. Finally, after a few years everyone gave up on him and just let him go. I wonder what happened to him. I'd like to see him again someday.

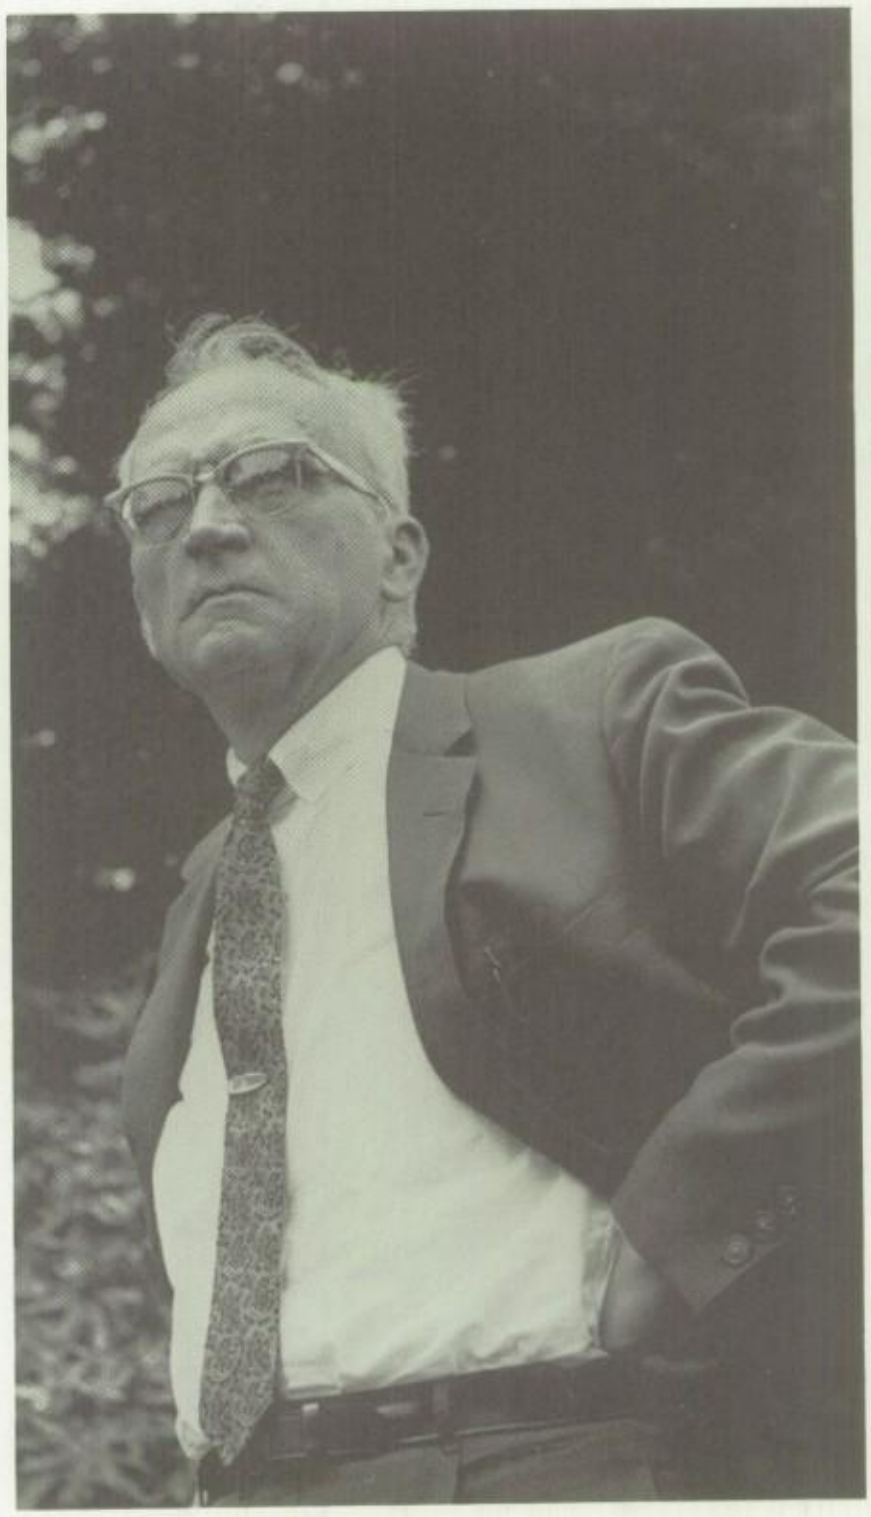












My steps sound muffled as I climb each stair. Warmth. Sleep. Down the hall I can see the strip of yellow light under my door. The knob is cold and in the room the light sharply outlines each object and reflects against the black window panes. My bed is stacked with red and tan folders, dirty clothes, loose papers. There is no more room on my chair. My winter coat feels heavily hot. I unbutton my top button with one hand as I stoop to pick up a book at the foot of my bed, grasp it, and move toward the book case far across the room.

There were two boys who played in the sun for hours, building castles in the gooey mud and making stick towers. Their soldiers were made of grass that stood in wavering rows. They left the footprints of their rubbers in the melting snow and sloshed through the puddles. They ran in circles tugging at each other's jackets. One tucked himself beside a pine tree and the other squeaked as he jumped from behind the broad truck. They ran down the gravel path and padded one after the other across the concrete bridge, panting and collapsing only to pop up again in wild pursuit of some bird's call. Their waving arms brushed the blackened trunks and pulled at the moist branches. They stumbled and fell over old roots and vines and somersaulted up with muddy pants and ran on to the open field and picked the deadened stalks of corn, wagging them in each other's faces.

Varsity's
Best years.

Dear Dick,
There's not much about you that can be expressed in words. Best of luck at N.Y.U. Perhaps when I'm at Columbia I'll bump into you although New York's quite a big town. I reckon won't be the same without your N.Y. Ranger jersey and your continuous hockey tournaments.
Good luck the Puerto Rican.
